argued here that the degree of state institutionalization conditions the sustainability of government influence over the economy and financial system. States with high levels of institutionalization are able to exercise economic influence at minimal cost or net gain, even when the economy is highly internationalized. States with low levels of institutionalization incur significant costs when they attempt to exercise economic influence and are more likely to be constrained by internationalization. In addition, the degree of state institutionalization affects prospects for international cooperation.

A high level of state institutionalization means that a country is likely to be able to cooperate when necessary to secure government influence. A low level of institutionalization means that a state is likely to find such cooperation difficult.

The three countries used as cases, Indonesia, Singapore and Malaysia, show that the government of each country had a different

Rating Agencies", Congressional Financial Crisis", Congressional Congressional Hearing, September

Although the mass media has already sentenced the rating agencies for employing loose standards, a more formal investigation is necessary before drawing firm conclusions. More specifically, it is important to examine whether the rating agencies indeed relaxed their standards, particularly in the recent periods of interest such as the Dot-Com crash and the current subprime crisis. In this paper, I study whether the credit rating agencies tighten or loosen the corporate ratings during the period 1985 - 2007. I report two main findings: First, I find that between 1985-2002, there is a divergent pattern between investment grade and speculative grade rating standards. That is, the rating agencies tighten the standards for investment grade ratings, while relaxing the standards for speculative grade ratings. Second, I find that around 2002, there is a sharp structural break towards "more stringent" ratings in both investment grade and speculative grade rating categories.

My first major finding is a puzzling divergent pattern between investment grade and speculative grade standards during 1985-2002. As in Blume, Lim, and Mackinlay (1998) (henceforth BLM), I find that the investment grade ratings tighten during this period. Holding firm characteristics constant, the tightening amounts to an average of 1.1 notches for investment grade ratings. However, in contrast to investment grade ratings, speculative grade ratings loosen 0.6 notches during the same period. The loosening of standards in speculative grade ratings is consistent with the widespread criticism of agencies during the Dot-Com crash. Before 2002, the tightening trend in standards shown by BLM pertains only to the investment grade category, where the default rates are rare in any case. However, consistent with the popular wisdom, the rating agencies were indeed getting looser in their

Experimental investigation of a micro-porous-enhanced surface in flow boiling

Abstract :

A flow boiling loop was designed and built to provide flow velocities up to 3 m/s in a test section. A plain copper block heater and an enhanced copper block heater were flush-mounted in the test section to investigate the effects of a micro-porous-enhanced surface in flow boiling. The test liquid was FC-72, a highly wetting dielectric liquid. The nucleate boiling curves for flow boiling were compared with that for pool boiling. Research had been performed showing the effects of inlet velocity, inlet subcooling level, and ABM coating (aluminum, brushable-ceramic, and MEK) on flow boiling. At an inlet velocity of 2.5 m/s and 30°C subcooling, the ABM-enhanced heater increased CHF by 534 percent and enhanced nucleate boiling heat transfer coefficient (at 13.4 W/cm²) by 2,700 percent, compared with a plain heater in saturated pool boiling at atmospheric pressure. Recommendations were given to further improve this high flowrate flow boiling loop.
