

Copyright Compliance

A very quick guide to copyright do's & don'ts

Safeguarding you and your organization

Your organization is licensing, not buying, the codes and standards to which you have access and has committed you as an employee to uphold the Terms & Conditions of the license.

The following is a high level common sense approach providing guidance to help you understand the commitment.

What you can do as an authorized user

- Unlimited searching and viewing of documents included in the service.
- Print a copy of a document for your personal use.
- Download and view a document temporarily on your computer for short term use. To prevent use of outdated documents, we recommend viewing documents directly from your subscription service.
- Use a limited amount of content from a document in a document you create for internal use. Best practice is to reference the standards organization (e.g., ISO), document number, revision status, publication date, and paragraph number.

What You Cannot Do As An Authorized User

- Further reproduce or photocopy a document you download or print.
- Share access to the service, or a document you download or print, with a third party.
- Develop a personal electronic or hardcopy library of documents or create a derivative work from the service.

- Remove or obscure the content or any other markings on a document you download or print.

If you are unsure if the way in which you want to use a standards organization's content is permitted, please ask either your legal counsel or the Standards Developing Organization in question.
